With Love, Grade 12

As we bid farewell to the halls and classrooms of our beloved school, we cannot help but look back on the past year with a mix of nostalgia and gratitude.

The year began with our class working on the ETM presentation which offered us the opportunity to bond with both faculty and students. Considering that we were the first batch of Grade XII from Ambience, we undoubtedly dealt with our set of academic challenges. One of the highlights of our year was Teachers' Day. We took this opportunity to express our heartfelt gratitude for the tireless efforts our teachers put in.

The farewell holds a special place in all our hearts and it was truly one of our fondest memories that we will cherish forever. We would like to extend our sincere appreciation to our juniors for their efforts in making our farewell ceremony so memorable. Your hard work, creativity, and thoughtfulness meant the world to us. As we embark on new adventures, we carry with us the values and lessons that our school has instilled in us. We are grateful for the opportunities as well as guidance our teachers have provided.

Farewell, dear school, and thank you for an unforgettable year!

The Ancient Mummy!!

There lived an ancient mummy in a creepy house. Nobody dared to go there, because no one would ever come back from the house! There was a rumour that every once in a decade, the mummy used to come alive.

One night, a group of travellers arrived at the house for shelter. They obviously did not know it was a haunted house. They called out, “Is anybody here?” There was no answer.

The travellers were sleepy and exhausted. There lay mouthwatering dishes on the table. The weary tourists wolfed down the food and discussed the plans for the next day. The group was just about to sleep when suddenly, they heard a voice, “Who dare enter my house? How dare you?” “W-we did not know you lived in this h-house,” replied one of the travellers named Patrick. A creature rose from the ground. She was covered with bandages all over her body. She had sockets for eyes.

The travellers, frightened, screamed, “A mummy!”

The mummy hissed — ready to pounce on them. The travellers were petrified. Patrick said, “The only way to destroy the mummy is to expose her to moonlight.” One of his companions tried to open the door with all his might — but it was of no use. The door was tightly bolted. Left with no other choice, Patrick took out his knife and attacked the mummy. However, he was no match for the mummy due to her magical powers. He was sent flying towards the door. The wooden door cracked and split open. Moonlight entered the room.

“Nooooo!” the mummy screeched and disintegrated. All the travellers hurriedly exited the spooky house. The thought of the haunted house still gives them goosebumps today. -Kimaya Kanaujia 4A

Wings of Freedom

On wings of freedom, we take flight,
Above the clouds, into the light.
Where skies are vast, and dreams are true,
A world of hope in every view.

No chains to hold, no weight to bear,
A heart unbound, a soul laid bare.
With every breeze, our spirits soar,
To seek the stars, to ask for more.

Through storm and sun, we rise above,
With courage, strength, and boundless love.
The world below may try to sway,
But on these wings, we find our way.

On wings of freedom, we are free,
To chase the winds, to simply be.
A flight untamed, a path unknown,
With wings of freedom, we have grown.
